

Hip to be Square

Legends, laughs and dungeons in historic hotel

BRUCE DENNILL

FOR some reason, you expect accommodation steeped in history to exist outside of the city centre in Cape Town – perhaps out in the winelands or round the back of the mountain in Constantia somewhere.

But the information board in the tiny enclosed square that gives the Cape Heritage Hotel its name details the long-term existence of the building (or at least the parts of it that haven't been hidden or obliterated by the many renovations since 1771).

And the ancient vine (pictured) in the courtyard – purportedly the oldest in the country – gives mute witness to the many events that must have taken place here over the years.

The venerable nature of the place doesn't translate into fuddy-duddy porters mumbling about the old days, though. The young, friendly and efficient front-of-house man, for instance, wore no less than eight rings.

General manager Semwano Chonya ("Sam" to returning guests) has a public school accent that will likely put conservative foreign guests at ease, but quickly reveals a wicked sense of humour, referring to a pair of guests who became friends and then her unofficial "gay parents".

"Parents provide for their children, and they provide me with shoes!" she giggles.

Don't let the fun-loving veneer fool you, though: Chonya's deep affection for the venue and its guests extends to knowing which specific pieces of furniture in which rooms are next in line to be reconditioned (not that any faults are readily noticeable).

A stay at the hotel will naturally mean becoming familiar with the other enterprises scattered around the square.

Like all old venues, the place has its quirks, and visitors can enjoy discovering a cheese shop in a dungeon, a fantastic little delicatessen and a trendy restaurant and cocktail venue tucked away around a corner behind what looks like an old bomb shelter door. Expect a fetish club owner to cash in on that real estate should the current owners move on...

There's also, in one corner of the square, a disco-ball effect caused by a reflective pyramid-shaped structure that spins. Apparently it's designed to scare the pigeons away but hey, this is Cape Town – you'll probably find them fluffing out their tail feathers and enjoying the show.
